London, UK – 12th June, 2006: T-Mobile today announces the availability of the World Cup edition Nokia N70 offered exclusively with a robust, UK and pan-European satellite navigation system, 'CoPilot® Live'.

The Nokia N70 World Cup is the latest in T-Mobile's web'n'walk portfolio and exclusively offers the official FIFA 2006 World Cup football game from EA Sports and exclusive football themed icons such as goalkeeper gloves, shin pads and footballs. In addition the N70 offers a football pitch wallpaper theme and referee's whistle ringtones.

Using T-Mobile's web'n'walk tariff – for just £7.50 per month - users have unlimited web browsing on the N70 to keep up with the latest news and views on the World Cup.

The N70 is the latest addition to T-Mobile's range of devices to offer CoPilot® Live. CoPilot® Live satellite navigation transforms the handset into an advanced communications-enabled satellite navigation and route planning system, offering accurate door-to-door guidance on the N70's colour screen with spoken turn instructions via the built-in loudspeaker.

CoPilot® Live delivers a satellite navigation experience on the N70 that is comparable to a dedicated navigation device or a built-in system. There are a number of features available on the N70 that are unavailable on traditional Sat Nav systems. These include real-time location tracking via the internet and live traffic information, delivered wirelessly to the phone via T-Mobile's web'n'walk service. The Instant Detour button enables drivers to find a way around the side streets if they hit an unexpected hold-up. Driver safety is a priority, with an auto-zoom map only displayed near a turn to avoid distraction.

CoPilot® Live was recently seen in action being used by the rich and famous on the 2006 Gumball 3000 Rally. All 120 drivers, including legendary skateboarder Tony Hawk and actress Martine McCutcheon depended on the system to find the way across 3 continents in just 8 days. Each vehicle was equipped with a T-Mobile phone and CoPilot.
